For a Farmers' Bank.

The farmers of the United States need better facilities for borrowing money for their current business. The farmer is a business man, just as the merchant is. But the banking system of the country is organized for the merchant business man and not for the farmer business man.

It is organized for the short time loans of merchants rather than for the long time loans of farmers.

The merchant needs credit to buy goods. He can get this credit at the bank for thirty, sixty or ninety days. As he sells his goods he can pay off his loan. This condition suits the requirements of the banker who has to be in a position to pay deposits on demand. He can't afford to tie up his resources for any length of time. He must keep them constantly moving so he can lay his hands on them with little delay.

The farmer's business is different from the merchant's. If he needs money in the spring he can't expect to repay it until his crops are harvested and sold. His credit ought to extend over a much longer term than the merchant's.

But the bank in its very nature isn't organized to handle this sort of business. It does handle it, of course, as well as it can. But it isn't in a position to give the farmer the sort of credit he often ought to have.

Abroad they have recognized this fact, and in Europe great rural credit organizations have been formed to take care of the farmers' business loans. These are co-operative societies under the government. The European farmers have learned that by pooling their resources they can provide credit needed by the individual farmers.

A movement has been started in this country to have Congress appoint a commission to work out a plan adapted to American conditions. A resolution is to be presented in both houses of Congress asking for the appointment of such a commission to go into the matter. You can help bring about this action if you will write to your representative and your senators expressing your interest in the subject.—Kansas City Times

Best wishes to the News.

The Movies.

She loves the movies dearly,
Each night you'll find her there,
Because, forsooth, she merely
Don't have to fix her hair.
—Painesville Telegraph Republican.

Another movie booster
Is little Johnnie Peck,
Because the little rooster
Don't have to wash his neck.
—Youngstown Telegram.

Another movie lover,
The leader of them all,
Is the man seeking cover
When bill collectors call.
—Houston Post.

Another movie lover
Who goes there all the time,
Explains his ardent passion;
"It only costs a dime."
—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

And occasionally a man
Confesses it is so
That he's a movie fan
Because he likes the show.
—Kentucky New Era.

We kiddies to the movies go,
Soon as we get supper,
And to church 'tis so,
Nobody goes but "mudder"

Fine Promotion For Mr. Robert J. Ball.

Friends of Mr. Robert J. Ball, who has for some years been connected with the Southern Optical Company, have learned of his promotion to the position of general manager of the company. Mr. Ball will take charge of some of the work heretofore conducted by Mr. Carl Wiseman, who will remain as president, and will keep in touch with the management.

Mr. Ball came to Louisville from Hardinsburg several years ago, and has made a fine impression in business circles in Louisville. In assuming the post of general manager at the Southern Optical Company, Mr. Ball takes up business duties of much importance and is considered admirably fitted for the place.—Louisville Post.

The Lexingtonian.

The Lexingtonian, Col. W. P. Walton's new weekly, fairly scintillates with interesting matter, concerning the politics, material interests and gossip affairs that concern Kentuckians. Col. Walton is one of the most forceful and piquant writers of the Kentucky press and every column of his paper contains something highly interesting to all classes. The Lexingtonian ought to have a good circulation in every county in the State. Every reader would be better informed and a better citizen from the education he would get from it.—Owensboro Messenger.
